Scottys Castle

Death Valley. The name is gloomy, yet in this valley below sea level, you can find spectacular wildflower displays, snow covered peaks, singing sand dunes, old mines, wildlife of various varieties, palm trees, a castle, and last but not least the hottest spot in North America.

As temperatures soared above 130 degrees in July, the men working the mines would load the borax onto the wagons, which were pulled by the famous 20 mule teams, to the railroad for shipment across the country. The wheels on the wagons were taller than the men loading them.. Sounds like fun, doesn't it?

We'll sit back and relax, because we won't be going in July, and even if we did, we wouldn't have to load wagons. You see, we will be taking in the vastness of the valley from the comfort of our deluxe air conditioned Motorcoach. Even though it's big, we won't have to load it.

Visiting Death Valley National Park takes us back millions of years, when this barren land was once a mighty sea. There is still evidence of that time in many places where our eye will go so that our feet don't have to. Because no one ever sees everything in Death Valley on their first trip, you'll want to return again soon.
